COURSE DESCRIPTION:

Research Colloquium in East Asian Art History offers a platform for MA students, doctoral candidates, and postdoctoral researchers to develop their individual research projects. Participants will engage in the process of formulating research questions, identifying pertinent research materials and methodologies, and exploring relevant theoretical frameworks. They will have the opportunity to present their works in progress and receive feedback from their peers. Additionally, the colloquium will facilitate discussions on secondary sources relevant to both individual research projects and the broader field of East Asian Art History.

TEACHING AND EXMINATION:

- The teaching consists of seminars.
- The students are expected to attend all sessions, read the assigned materials in time for classes and actively participate in class discussion.
- To pass the course, students are required to deliver an oral presentation on their individual research project.

READINGS:

- Literature will be aligned with individual research projects and will be selected as the course progresses.
